LINKEDIN: www.linkedin.com/in/azadeh-davari/

Azadeh Davari, Ph.D., is a certified executive leadership coach with more than 10 years of experience in designing and delivering personal and organizational leadership development programs with a deep reflective approach to raise consciousness. She is an award-winning trainer with a successful record of founding and facilitating hundreds of local and international leadership capacity building workshops for professionals in fields of human resources, science, technology, engineering, startups, education, and healthcare, as well as for organizations such as UNICEF, the W.H.O., multinational corporations, NGOs, and universities.

Azadeh is a researcher with diverse academic background from leading universities in the United States, Europe, and the Middle East, with a focus on intercultural understanding, diversity, inclusion, and equity. As an organizational consultant and coach, her interest is to create a deeper understanding of self, others, groups, and system to develop intercultural dialogue and collaboration. Her passion is to increasingly attend issues of diversity, inclusion, equality, social justice, conflict management, women's empowerment, mindfulness, consciousness, and reflective practices in leadership and organizational change. Her diverse background of education and global experience is significant to her style of program design, coaching, and facilitation. She is an adjunct faculty at Center for Creative Leadership, where she facilitates solutions to empower managers and their teams. She is also adjunct Professor at Pepperdine University Graduate School of Education and Psychology and serves as faculty and coach at RISE San Diego Urban Leadership Program.

Azadeh received her doctorate in Leadership Studies with a focus on Organizational Leadership and Consulting from University of San Diego, where her dissertation work was focused on culturally-based leadership perspective. Prior to her doctorate studies, she completed two years of Nonprofit Leadership and Management MA courses and a certification in Executive Leadership Coaching at the University of San Diego. She holds a Masters and Bachelor of Science in Food Science and Technology Engineering. She has a diploma in Food and Nutrition Security from Wageningen University in The Netherlands and is an alumni of Asia Pacific Leadership Program at East West Center, Honolulu.
